

Aaron Baughman

I am from Westerville, OH, and grew up attending St. Paul's Lutheran Church. I spent much of my childhood outdoors, and am an Eagle Scout. I attended undergrad at Warren Wilson College in the mountains of North Carolina, where I received an environmental education degree. Warren Wilson is one of the most unique colleges in the country, and is in the top three most environmentally friendly colleges in the United States. It has a working farm that provides food to the cafeteria, and every student works on campus and participates in service activities for the local community. While I was a student at Warren Wilson College, I was the director of the on-campus Big Brother/Big Sister program, as well as being a Big Brother myself. I have studied abroad in Thailand and El Salvador, and have spent most of my work experience working at environmental education camps and summer camps. I have worked everywhere from Lutheran Memorial camp, to camps in North Carolina and New York State, to a Jewish Camp in Westerville.

My love for Creation is what has called me to attend seminary and I look forward to see where God will lead me to use my passion for the outdoors in my ministry.

I am currently engaged to Sunny Cooper who is in her senior year at Warren Wilson College, and we plan to get married next year, as we both take a year off to travel around the country.
